FINITURA FERRO GREZZO

FINITURA FERRO GREZZO

Negli ultimi anni sta prendendo sempre più piede il trend della finitura “effetto grezzo”, per far risaltare ancora di più la materia con la quale è stato realizzato il prodotto. Questo conferire all’arredo un gusto più vivo, dove le imperfezioni vengono accettate e anzi sono segno di unicità del materiale.

PURTROPPO LE FINITURE “EFFETTO FERRO GREZZO” NON SONO PER TUTTI.

La più grande controindicazione è legata alla superficie di materiale, poiché può presentare “difetti” come graffi e/o effetti chiaro-scuro o puntini di ruggine dovuti a microevaporazioni sotto la verniciatura trasparente, che possono scontrarsi con gusti estetici più tradizionali. Quando si sceglie una finitura di questo tipo si deve mettere in conto che il materiale è vivo e potrebbe quindi presentare alcune imperfezioni. Se si vuole una superficie perfettamente uniforme è meglio scegliere una finitura verniciata a polvere, sicuramente molto più facile da gestire ma, secondo noi, anche meno “affascinante” rispetto al sapore crudo del ferro grezzo.

In recent years, the trend of “raw effect” finishing has become increasingly popular, to make the material with which the product was made stand out even more. This gives the furniture a more lively taste, where imperfections are accepted and indeed are a sign of the uniqueness of the material.

UNFORTUNATELY THE “RAW IRON EFFECT” FINISHES ARE NOT FOR EVERYONE.

The biggest contraindication is linked to the surface of the material, as it can present “defects” such as scratches and/or light-dark effects or rust dots due to microevaporations under the transparent paint, which can clash with more traditional aesthetic tastes. When choosing a finish of this type you must take into account that the material is alive and could therefore present some imperfections. If you want a perfectly uniform surface, it is better to choose a powder-coated finish, which is certainly easier to manage but, in our opinion, also less “fascinating” than the raw taste of raw iron.

Ces dernières années, la tendance des finitions « effet brut » est devenue de plus en plus populaire, pour faire ressortir encore plus le matériau avec lequel le produit a été fabriqué. Cela donne au meuble un goût plus vivant, où les imperfections sont acceptées et sont en effet le signe du caractère unique du matériau.

MALHEUREUSEMENT LES FINITIONS « EFFET FER BRUT » NE SONT PAS POUR TOUT LE MONDE.

La plus grande contre-indication est liée à la surface du matériau, car celui-ci peut présenter des « défauts » tels que des rayures et/ou des effets clair-foncé ou des points de rouille dus aux microévaporations sous la peinture transparente, qui peuvent entrer en conflit avec des goûts esthétiques plus traditionnels. Lors du choix d’une finition de ce type, vous devez tenir compte du fait que le matériau est vivant et pourrait donc présenter quelques imperfections. Si vous souhaitez une surface parfaitement uniforme, mieux vaut opter pour une finition thermolaquée, certes plus facile à gérer mais, à notre avis, aussi moins « fascinante » que le goût brut du fer brut.
